CARD OF THANKS

Mrs. F. C. Alcock and family wish to thank their many friends and neighbors for their kindness and expressions of sympathy in their bereavement.

ESTEEMED DISTRICT PIONEER LAID TO REST

The ranks of the Old Timers was again called upon this week, when Frederick Charles Alcock, one of the oldest members, quietly passed away at his home on Saturday, Nov. 5.

The late Mr. Alcock had been ailing for several years and although his passing was not unexpected, it saddened a home where he was dearly loved and a community who had valued his friendship and association for thirty-four years. Mr. Alcock was a very ready to lend a helping hand and both he and Mrs. Alcock had been closely associated with community affairs since their arrival in this district in 1904.

Mr. Alcock was born in Tuxford, England, September 10, 1864. On October 11, 1891, he married Miss Alice Maud Burkland of Ripley, Derbyshire. In 1901 they came to Alberta and homesteaded west of town where they resided until 1907, when he retired and took up residence in town.

He leaves to mourn his loss his wife and one daughter, Mrs. M. D. Chamberlain, one grand-daughter, Miss Phyllis Chamberlain, all of Champion; two brothers and three sisters in England and one brother in Lethbridge. A private funeral service was held at his home on Tuesday afternoon, followed by a public service in the Community Hall. Rev. Peter Dawson officiated. The large number of sorrowing friends who attended the service testified to the esteem the deceased was held in the district. Floral tributes were numerous and beautiful. The pall-bearers were Neil McLeod, Pete Hahn, A. Hopkins, O. B. Smith, A. S. McDougall and H. Gill. Interment was made in the local cemetery.

WINNING THE CHAMPIONSHIP

Morga McDougall trimming her lamb at the annual livestock show held in Calgary last week. Outclassing all other competitors with a display that, in the words of the judge, "would do credit to a professional trimmer," Morga won first prize in the junior sheep trimming contest for boys and girls 10 to 15 years old, for the fifth year in succession, and then won the grand championship when her smoothly trimmed lamb was placed beside the winner in the division for boys and girls 16 and 18 years old.

The judge, John Wilson, Jr., of Innisfail, president of the Sheep Breeders' Association, was himself winner of the lamb trimming competition 20 years ago. Mr. Wilson explained that clipping must be done uniformly all over, the object being to bring out the good points of the animal without making them appear artificial.

Morga, who is 14 years old and a Grade IX student in the Champion Consolidated school, has every reason to be justly proud of her accomplishment and is receiving the congratulations of her many friends.

IN MEMORIAM

McLEAN—In loving memory of my dear husband, William Henry McLean, who passed away May 11th, 1937.
Tonight the stars are gleaming
On a lonely, silent grave,
Where sleeps in dreamland slumber,
One I loved but could not save.
No one knows the silent heartaches,
Only those who have lost can tell
Of the grief I bear in silence,
For the one I loved so well.
—Ever remembered by his wife,

CLEVERVILLE PIONEER CLUB DANCE, SUCCESS

A capacity crowd was in attendance Friday night when the Battle of Orchestras dance, sponsored by the Cleverville Pioneer Club, was held in the Community Hall, with Art Hopkins as master of ceremonies.

Three orchestras, Fraser's of Carmangay, Sanguist's of Stavely, and Matlock's of Champion, were on hand to compete for the prize, each orchestra playing six numbers in turn. The judges, L. Warren, H. Ulrich and F. Clever, were unable to agree on the winner and it was decided to divide the prize money evenly between the orchestras. It had been arranged, prior to the dance, that the prize-winning orchestra was to have the opportunity of playing for the Annual dance of the Club early in the New Year but on account of there being no decision, a draw was made, the Matlock orchestra winning the draw. O. Howerton won the honors for calling the best square dance.

Supper was served by the Ladies Aid in the dining room of the hall.

Hon. Peter Dawson, M.L.A. is leaving Sunday night for Edmonton, to attend the special session of the Legislature.

Women's Institute
November Meeting

A particularly interesting meeting of the Women's Institute was held on Tuesday, the 8th, at the home of Mrs. E. H. Freeze. Miss E. Schultz was the speaker for the afternoon, and gave a lucid review of International Relations, illustrated by cartoons and a map. She stressed the fact that the present struggle throughout the world was one between democracy and autocracy. This could be seen exemplified in all the theatres of war and unrest. She reviewed briefly the present situation in Palestine, Spain, China and Central Europe. In Europe the trouble was partly that of the difference in outlook between old, adult nations, and nations passing through the stage of adolescence. Time alone could reveal whether Chamberlain of England would be regarded as a saviour of mankind or as one who had weakly given way to Dictators. Mrs. Voisey expressed the gratitude of the meeting for the very fine address.

A delicious lunch was served by Mrs. Freeze and Mrs. Latif.

POOR MAN'S GOLD

Hammond swiftly crossed the lowland toward Lone creek. The workers along the stream passed in a blur. Far ahead he sighted two men walking along the opposite bank. Hammond began to turn, then, disregarding the rough bridge ahead, he plunged into the stream. Waist deep, he swished through it and clambered out the other side. Then, dripping, he rushed forward.

Low Snade turned his weak face at the sound of his approach. Then suddenly gray-faced, he begged: "Let me alone—let me alone!" Hammond had outstretched; now he was on the man, bending him in his grasp. "Give me that money!" he commanded.

"Look here!" Kenning exclaimed, as he turned back. "What's all this about?"

Hammond gave no heed. "Hear me!" he shouted at Low Snade. "Give me that money!"

"You're all wrong. I haven't got any money!" the weak-faced Snade had caught the distorted wrists of the rainer and was hanging to them desperately. Hammond bulged his heavy shoulders; Snade rose in his grasp, legs dangling queerly like those of a duster.

"Shall I choke it out of you?" he asked. Quickly he threw the man from him, then rushed him for a new grip. His muscular fingers widened, Snade struck him on the wrist, wildly; Hammond gave no evidence that he felt the blows. Now his hands, distorted with muscle, plowed deep into Snade's throat.

"Look out, Jack!" Kenning shouted. "You'll kill him!"

"What of it?" growled the prospector. Then to Snade, "Give me that money!" Low Snade writhed helplessly, gasping. "You know what I mean; that money you stole from Jeanne Towers." Low Snade hesitated only a second longer. Then he raised his weak hands and yielded to his throat. Slowly, Hammond relaxed his grip. The man staggered aloud, with sagging knees. "Well, get it! Don't stand there stalling. Get out that money!"

Snade, still reeling, pawed for his pockets. Currency, the suggests, the phal of gold; slowly he passed them over into the waiting hands of Jack Hammond. The prospector turned to Bruce Kenning.

"What's this rat to you?" "Why—not him. We were just talking about a job."

"Be sure it's never anything more than that." Black with rage, he turned to the gasping Snade. "Now you—get over there on the Alaskan side. And stay there. Do you understand?"

Slowly the man began to move away, in the direction of the uncompleted buildings of Around the World Annie's dance hall.

A half hour later, his clothing still soggy from the crossing of the creek, he walked slowly down toward Kenning's claim. Something of calmness had come now, calmness and amazement for the first time in his life; he had wanted to kill a man. He did not know why. All he could realize was that a blind, murderous rage had held him, until at last Jeanne Towers' children's coughs.

money was safe in his hands and he was hurrying back to her cabin with it.

CHAPTER VII.

Around the World Annie strode what passed as the streets of Sapphire Lake upon an important mission. Summer had come now, with its hot days, and almost incessant light; Annie was dressed for it. Timmy Moon had brought her quite a wardrobe on his last trip and Annie was displaying a sample. A long period of expenditure was over; now she could announce to this little northern world that she was about to reap the profits.

Now and then Around the World Annie passed in supreme survey, for she was here on business. Picking her, as she went through town, were two men with hammers, an arm full of placards, printed in Vancouver, and a motley of tacks. Gradually they were turning the drabness of cabin exteriors to screaming blazes of white and scarlet.

"Wrote that all my myself," explained Around the World Annie, to a quickly thickening throng of admirers. "Ain't had for an old gal yet."

Among the many who passed to rest was one, however, on whom eyes recently had borne the shadows of deep worry. All had not gone well for McKenzie Joe during these last few months. He had been forced to watch a tremendous change engulf the young man whom he long ago had come to regard with an overpowering affection.

But McKenzie Joe never had been diplomatic. He was doing more in that direction now than ever before. At least, he kept his mouth tight when every atom of his supremely honest nature seemed to him to have a show-down and proclaim that he was tired of being dealt cards from a stacked deck, and was something of a warden. He felt sure of it. His distrust of Jack Joyce and Bruce Kenning amounted almost to mania.

Not that Joe blamed Jack for being blind. It was a wholly natural condition; the North makes a man even blind or woman even blind. Affliction is hard to cure. Jack Hammond could be the first person McKenzie Joe had seen take to climbing trees at the will of a woman. He could remember a few experiences of his own. All prospectors can.

The placards announcing Annie's grand premiere were still fresh in his mind as he turned into Jeanne's store.

"Listen," he announced, "I need some new duds. Can you get 'em by plane?"

"That's easy. Forty-four chest for the coat, thirty-six waist and thirty-one legs for the pants. If the sleeves are too long, I'll turn 'em up." Then, without a break. "How's business?"

"Rushing," answered Jeanne, writhing down the measurements.

"Fine," McKenzie Joe looked sourly into the distance, only to turn back as quickly. "Say," he asked, peering hard into her face. "You and me always have been good friends. I think a lot of you."

"Thanker, Joe."

"If Jack Hammond had any sense—"

"Do you have any particular color you like for this suit?" Jeanne broke in.

"Well, I guess not. I'm kind of partial to blue. Not that dead blue, you know. Something kind of lively."

She laughed. "You can see electric blue a long ways."

"That's my color. I want 'em to know I'm coming. And get me a couple of shirts. White, I guess. And a tie with some red in it—red and red. I'm going over to Around the World Annie's on the Fourth of July."

"Wearing red, white and blue, chuckled Jeanne.

"Might as well be neighborly," he said.

granted and started away.

Jack Hammond was at home when he arrived, with a poster he had ripped from a cabin wall.

"Have you seen it?" he asked. McKenzie Joe nodded.

"I've ordered a new suit for it." Jack stared. "Are you going over?"

The older man pretended a casual air. He reached for his shovel and pick, preparatory to moving up the trail toward the test shaft.

"Yes, I figured I might drop in and slap a few drinks under my belt."

Jack Hammond's jaw fell.

"You're not going to do that."

Fast War Planes
United States Planning To Meet Air Rivalry In Europe

A six-mile-a-minute war plane is the United States army's answer to European rivalry for speed supremacy in the air.

A 360-mile flight in 41 minutes from Dayton, Ohio, to Buffalo, N.Y., is the latest record.

Without halting to gloat over the P-37, the army intends to announce in a few days another and presumably even faster plane. Designated the P-40, it is an experimental job, and most details are yet to be disclosed for the present.

Both Germany and Great Britain have combat planes which have even greater speed than that attained by the P-37. But the air corps has a ready answer.

Later, Kelsey's flight and earlier trial, which were kept secret, were made with full military equipment. Germany claimed some 380 miles an hour for its Messerschmitt.

Although Britain's Spitfire exceeded 400 miles an hour, it was aided by a tailfin.

Trade Conquest In China
Japanese Merchants Getting A Strange-Hold On Business

Japan has started the second phase of her conquest of China—the job of winning conquered areas into the Rising Sun Empire.

Japanese diplomats, merchants, builders, professional men, promoters and propagandists have followed close on the heels of her advancing armies, bent on drawing profit and power from the territory where 200,000,000 Chinese have been brought under Japanese sway.

They are faced with passive resistance of China's millions, active resistance of night-riding guerrilla armies in the north, and pressure from neutral powers attempting to stop the closing of the open door to trade.

But the pace of political and economic penetration has quickened under the guidance of puppet governments directed from Tokyo.

Trade monopolies have been established in North China and Inner Mongolia. Neutral interests have been kept out of the Yangtze River valley because of "military necessity."

A "greater Shanghai" building plan is under way which would make the once important International Settlement of Shanghai a small, neutral island surrounded by a huge Japanese-dominated Chinese community.

At the same time, an educational and cultural program to paint a Japanese complexion on the face of conquered territories has been launched.

Without halting to gloat over the P-37, the army intends to announce in a few days another and presumably even faster plane. Designated the P-40, it is an experimental job, and most details are yet to be disclosed for the present.

Both Germany and Great Britain have combat planes which have even greater speed than that attained by the P-37. But the air corps has a ready answer.

Later, Kelsey's flight and earlier trial, which were kept secret, were made with full military equipment. Germany claimed some 380 miles an hour for its Messerschmitt.

Although Britain's Spitfire exceeded 400 miles an hour, it was aided by a tailfin.

Trade Conquest In China
Japanese Merchants Getting A Strange-Hold On Business

Japan has started the second phase of her conquest of China—the job of winning conquered areas into the Rising Sun Empire.

Japanese diplomats, merchants, builders, professional men, promoters and propagandists have followed close on the heels of her advancing armies, bent on drawing profit and power from the territory where 200,000,000 Chinese have been brought under Japanese sway.

They are faced with passive resistance of China's millions, active resistance of night-riding guerrilla armies in the north, and pressure from neutral powers attempting to stop the closing of the open door to trade.

But the pace of political and economic penetration has quickened under the guidance of puppet governments directed from Tokyo.

Trade monopolies have been established in North China and Inner Mongolia. Neutral interests have been kept out of the Yangtze River valley because of "military necessity."

A "greater Shanghai" building plan is under way which would make the once important International Settlement of Shanghai a small, neutral island surrounded by a huge Japanese-dominated Chinese community.

At the same time, an educational and cultural program to paint a Japanese complexion on the face of conquered territories has been launched.

A new joint Chinese-Japanese movie picture company expects to have a monopoly on importation of films, is being formed under sponsorship of the Japanese, Manchoukuo, China, provincial and central China reform governments.

Foreign business men in Peking and Tientsin recently expressed to have a monopoly on importation of films, is being formed under sponsorship of the Japanese, Manchoukuo, China, provincial and central China reform governments.

Although Windsor Castle Was "Blackened-Out" For Test Raid

Historic Windsor Castle, seat of kings since the days of William the Conqueror, was "blackened out" for 45 minutes in an air-raid test. The first raid on the castle, supposedly built on the site of King Arthur's meeting place with the Knights of the Round Table, resulted in "black" scoring hits on the state apartments and the sovereign's entrance.

Brown trout grows twice as large in New Zealand as in English waters, yet all of New Zealand's trout origin came from England.
